A Familiar Indian Snack, Still Largely Unorganized

In-shell peanuts are a deeply familiar "time-pass" snack — yet organized, branded formats remain notably absent from retail shelves.

01 — Strong Cultural Demand

Roasted in-shell peanuts are associated with railway travel, movies, tea breaks, casual gatherings, and everyday snacking — a habit spanning generations and regions.

02 — Unorganized Availability

Most commonly sold loose or through informal channels, where quality, hygiene, roasting consistency, sizing, and packaging vary significantly from vendor to vendor.

03 — Branded Format Gap

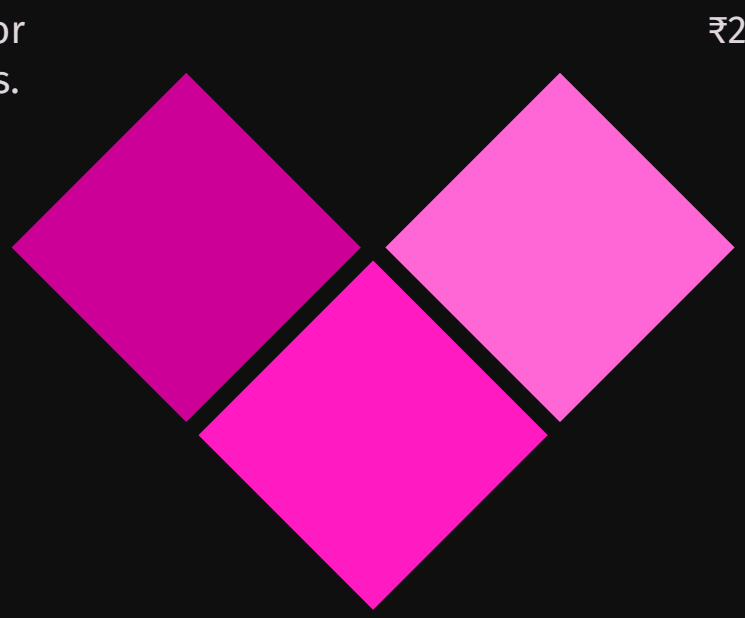

Organized snack shelves are filled with chips, namkeen, and shelled peanuts — while convenient branded in-shell peanut formats remain underrepresented.

Familiar Consumer Habit

Deep cultural demand for roasted in-shell peanuts.

Branded Hygienic Opportunity

₹20–₹30 impulse pouch for clean, trusted format.

Loose & Unbranded Supply

Mostly loose sales with inconsistent quality and hygiene.

Opportunity: Organize a familiar snack into a convenient ₹20–₹30 impulse-buy format — a hypothesis to be validated through early market pilots.
